Address format

The following address lines are used in order from bottom up:

- The last line (above the country name) contains only the postcode.
- The second last line specifies the delivery Post Office name or postal area name.
- Locality line can appear in rural or informal addresses.
- Sub-locality line may be required in some addresses and can appear in rural, informal or urban addresses.
- Line specifying postal delivery point may consist of:
 - PO Box or Private Bag identifier for postal delivery service addresses:
 - the delivery point identifier + street name, or local area for site addresses for physical addresses in urban areas. Site addresses are used for informal areas and for other areas without street names
 - the delivery point identifier + village name for physical addresses in rural areas: The delivery point identifier is a six digit number identifies the delivery point in the village.
- Any lines above the postal delivery point line contain finer-grain specification of internal routing, for example in multi-unit buildings and complexes.
- The first line specifies the addressee.

The regions are not to be specified as these are covered in the postcode.

If the postcode is not specified in the address, then the town should be included in the line used for the postcode.

For machine reading, the address should not contain punctuation marks such as full stops and commas at the end of lines. However special characters [/ - # ! &] and accents [^ ' " `] used for vowels as part of the address text are fully tolerated.
