

MEXICO

and its Commemorations

To speak of Mexico is to learn about the wide variety of commemorations that blend history, culture, and more. Among the highlights are Independence Day (September 15-16), Day of the Dead (November 2), and civic holidays such as February 5 (Constitution Day), all celebrated with vibrant festivities, gastronomy, music like son jarocho, mariachi, marimba, and ancestral traditions.

Some celebrations have been named Intangible Cultural Heritage, such as the Day of the Dead festival, which is so deeply rooted in the cultural life of the indigenous peoples of Mexico, or the ritual ceremony of the Voladores, which is part of many celebrations in various parts of the country, mainly in Puebla and Veracruz.

Food and music are fundamental parts of all celebrations, giving them a special character, since each region in Mexico boasts different dishes and rhythms. Therefore, when you have the opportunity to enjoy the various Mexican festivals, you can witness the richness of the country's history and traditions.

This exhibition consists of stamps that speak of the most representative historical and cultural commemorations, which identify us as Mexicans and are part of our history.
