Anatolian Wolves

Anatolia, which possesses remarkable biodiversity in terms of wildlife, is home to many wild species, including wolves.

Wolves in natural habitats are among the most important creatures that maintain ecological balance. For centuries, they have held a significant place in the cultures and lifestyles of Turks in particular, as well as various European and Asian societies that have shared nature with them. With their dominant strength and charismatic traits, wolves have appeared in Turkish, Mongolian, and Altai legends and epics.

Prepared by PTT Corporation, two commemorative stamps themed 'Anatolian Wolves' were put in circulation on 3 March 2025.

Saffron on Safranbolu

According to some botanical sources, the homeland of saffron (Crocus sativus), a member of the Iridaceae family, is Anatolia and the Eastern Mediterranean region, while other sources indicate that saffron was brought to Anatolia by Turks migrating from Central Asia. In the Middle East, saffron has been cultivated for at least 4,000 years to be used as an aromatic flavoring, perfume, dye, medicine, and even as an aphrodisiac.

Saffron cultivated in the Safranbolu district of Karabük, known as 'Safranbolu Saffron,' received a Geographical Indication from the Turkish Patent and Trademark Office on 18 March 2011 and became the first spice plant to obtain Geographical Indication registration from the EU on 17 January 2024.
