

Dame Damevski is a postal and digital infrastructure professional with more than two decades of experience spanning postal diversification, payments, and GovTech. As Director of International Markets at e-Boks, a postal digital infrastructure company, he leads partnerships with governments and postal operators worldwide to deliver trusted, secure digital communication and payment platforms. A former diplomat, Dame has long been engaged in global postal affairs, having attended four UPU Congresses and served as an observer to several UPU bodies since 2012. Before joining e-Boks, he held senior positions at Eurogiro and Inpay, driving innovation in cross-border postal payments and helping transform the Eurogiro cooperative into a modern, API-enabled postal payments and clearing network for more than 40 postal operators and Post banks worldwide. Recognized as a thought leader in postal digitization and public-private cooperation, Dame's work bridges diplomacy, policy, and commerce — advocating for a renewed postal mission that unites relevant communication, financial, and digital services in support of inclusive national development.
